

Brooke Brown

Community Leader

DPS Foundation board member since June 2008

Brooke Brown is currently the executive director of The Carson Foundation, a family foundation that promotes healthy and successful families with an emphasis on improving educational opportunities in the Denver community. She is also the co-founder and associate director of Project VOYCE (Voices of Youth Changing Education), which was born out of the closure of Manual High School. It seeks to create opportunities to engage youth in school improvement efforts.

Brown was previously a Spanish teacher at East High School and a consultant for the Micro-finance Development Project of the International Alliance for Women. She is a board member for Urban Peak and has volunteered for many youth-oriented organizations. She holds a master's in education from Harvard.
